

The Turf Of New Age Nobles

All we ever earn is nobility. In the measured pauses between our words, the silent spaces in our songs, the muffled click of the bedroom door and even in the rustle of our dreams. Nobility, in the New Age, isn't bequeathed, it is acquired sip by sip. It is a gentle spirit trotting through our veins and our homes.

At the cusp of Delhi and Noida, five imposing towers of Knightsbridge herald our arrival into a very private island of goodness gracious. A whispered elegance follows us through greens, blues, the sunlit and the breezy in bold minimalism of modern design synchronised with the wisdom of Vaastu.

We are shown through an arrangement of pathways, archways, column-less hallways and the corridors of Hafeez Contractor's brilliance right up to 6000 sq ft of our very personal floor. The beast of beauty stares back at us.

Knightsbridge. It becomes us.

Gates to the estate shut behind us, and the hills begin. The driveway, escorted by streams and fountains, rises and rolls through foliage both known and unfamiliar. We watch the landscape – lawns, hillocks, terraced gardens, trellised paths, topiaries, lovers' corner, celebration park – go past like scenes in a movie. We don't want it to end, but it does because the covered walkways invite us for a stroll to the clubhouse or the palm avenue or the pool or, if we please, wherever.

And we may just want to gallop back to the machaan we missed on the way. Birds and little creatures are great teachers, you know.

Water, it is said, reflects our true nature. It makes us yell and shriek and sing and even swim silently within us. The central swimming pools – large and kids' – are two blue eyes watching us constantly. We could most likely be found lounging with a drink and an unread Hemingway at the two piazzas on the verdant banks. Some of us may prefer the privacy of the pool at the clubhouse. While for those who happen to inhabit one of the duplex penthouses there is, of course, their personal pond in the clouds.

White cascades. Water bodies. Frothy spouts. Yeah, a lot of cheery gurgling Knightsbridge promises.

A gymnasium rippling with technology-muscle. Fully-equipped and truly sun-drenched, it's blessed with a view that will wrestle out all inertia. We do the works with a dedicated trainer and slip out for a jog criss-crossing the property. A volley of shouts from the tennis courts. The relatively quieter bouts of racquets hitting shuttle. The thundering impact of basketball. All sweeten the early morning calm just as the sound of distant drums. And in the designated meditation area, we espy our fetching neighbours blooming in the lotus-position. They too, we reckon, enjoy the outdoors more than the stoic serenity of the yoga room.

Ladies. Gentlemen. Sweat like a thoroughbred.

Out here, we don't really need to go out there. The clubhouse is everything a commune of a little over two hundred like-minded families could ask for on any ordinary day in an extraordinary way. A watering hole by the pool that we favour most evenings. Fine green-and-gold liveried dining. There's play area for kids. A mini theatre. The business centre. High-street shopping in the vicinity. And every conceivable gentlemanly sport played indoors. We could go on, but let's hold our horses.

A grand triple-height entrance devours us. The greetings of the concierge and the jingle-jangle of his keys bounce off the welcoming wood-and-gold interiors. We nod a smile and throw a three-finger salute at the security camera eyeing our passage to our personalised elevator lobby. The artwork at the far end may be a new acquisition, we notice. Our ascent into our very own kingdom begins to the accompaniment of the highland pan flute.

The elevator deposits us, yet it is the fresh natural light of our precious corridor that elevates us. This is prelude to a romance, prologue to a beautiful story and one deep breath before the dive. It is also that comfort room in our heads where we walk up and down and sometimes settle on the cool stone floor awaiting an epiphany. This is the kind of space cheeky children frequent during summer siesta.

Ah, lounge. Book-shelved family nook. Beautiful ashen emperador marble flooring softened with geometric-detailed Persian carpet. A congregation of straight-lined seating strewn about in a methodical madness. We bring our tea here along with bits and pieces of mellow conversation.

Although in high-end finish and ultra-modern fixtures, the kitchen takes us back to the good old days, as we watch our sunny runny eggs go sputtering from the frying pan onto our eager plates. Large is the Knightsbridge kitchen. Large enough to sit-down four at a homely table in its motherly belly. And this stable of memories may easily and abruptly become the heart of lavish culinary experiments leading to a grand feast later in the night. Being unobtrusively attached to the lobby, the main service area, the utilities section, the store and the staff quarters, our kitchen is an efficient machine.

And the window, it's our morning television.

The expansive stage is set. Guests make an appearance from the left. They glide up-front in twos and threes and sink into a crescent sitting arrangement upholstered in muted fabric. Soft and subdued runs the theme so as to underline the vanities of the visitors more. Nevertheless, two elaborate earrings – the chandeliers – enlighten the chatter. Wood and lustre on the walls honey-soak the air. Some of us, balancing our poisons, amble over to the star-studded deck; others cast furtive glances at the formidable long table which will soon be a stage of its own. Believe it or not, living and dining is what we all live and die for.

The decks in all four directions are chasers. Of the sun, the wind, the sky, the clouds and the music of nature that belittles our own. It's a different rain that falls here, obliquely kissing our feet. Given its width and the anti-skid ceramic flooring, the main deck is destined to be one fab hangout.

We could say a four-poster bed has been pulled to the centre to allow a stallion to canter around it. We think the Persian carpet converses with the artworks decorating a wall, and the chandelier appears to listen-in. Maybe it is our imagination, and the tall sheer drapes don't actually shatter like glass in the morning blast of a December sunrise. Let's not try and describe an abstraction that deserves to be felt. The master bedroom and suite is purely an inner experience.

Black marquina marble with gold hues.
Separate tubs and shower enclosures.
Attached dressing areas, but exclusive.
An overwhelming harvest-moon mirror.
Grains in the stone. The rhythm of water.
Toughened windows and the view beyond.
Details too many are too minute to tell.
